Joyce Fitzpatrick

Joyce J. Fitzpatrick has been dean of the Frances Payne Bolton School of Nursing at Case Western Reserve University since 1982. In 1988, with support from Cleveland's John P. Murphy Foundation, she initiated a faculty exchange program between the Bolton School and the University of Galway and helped to develop a new nursing education and practice model there. Since 1988, she has presented continuing education sessions in Galway, Dublin and Cork attended by hundreds of Irish nurses. The first of three nurses Fitzpatrick has brought from Ireland for postgraduate studies at CWRU has become the first nurse in Ireland to hold a Ph.D. in Nursing, with a second now completing her dissertation. The Bolton School's World Health Organization Collaborating Center for Nursing, of which Fitzpatrick is director, provides consultation on nursing education and research throughout the world and forged collaborations to universities in Egypt, Italy, Hungary, Slovenia, Uganda, Thailand and Zimbabwe. She is the author of more than 100 publications in the fields of nursing research and education, coeditor of the Annual Review of Nursing Research series (now in its thirteenth volume) and editor of the journal Applied Nursing Research.
